MONEY SAVVY GENERATION® PIONEERS FREE DIGITAL CONTENT FOR PARENTS AND EDUCATORS TO HELP KIDS GET SMART ABOUT MONEY

CHICAGO, February 9, 2006 - According to a recent Pew Internet and American Life Project Survey, almost a third of the 22 million U.S. adults who own iPods or other MP3 players have downloaded and listened to podcasts. In its continuing effort to provide parents and educators the right tools to teach children sound money management practices, Money Savvy Generation has introduced a new Helping Kids Get Smart About Money podcast series on its Web site, www.MSGen.com, featuring nationally recognized kids and money expert Susan Beacham.

"Teaching children how to handle money in a responsible fashion is something that has the power to literally change the course of their life," said Beacham. "With that type of mandate, we can never stop looking for pro-active, technologically innovative venues to get the word out about basic personal finance education for children." Susan's experience as a parent, former banker, teacher, keynote speaker and currently "Healthy Finances" columnist for Chicago Parent magazine come together to deliver pragmatic advice in warm, engaging manner.

The first three podcasts—each about eight minutes in length—explore Teaching Kids the Value of Money, Teaching Delayed Gratification, and How Kids Mimic Our Financial Habits. New topics will be introduced regularly such as Teaching Kids They Have Money Choices, The Ins and Outs of Allowance, and Kids Can Learn That Waiting Pays Dividends.

Podcast enthusiasts can browse for the Helping Kids series by pasting the URL "http://www.msgen.com/prod/podcasts/getsmart.xml" into their podcasting software. Podcasting technology allows users to subscribe once and automatically download new audio file content as it becomes available to their computer or onto a portable music device.

Along with this new podcast series, Money Savvy Generation's Web site also features a first-of-its-kind discussion forum which allows parents and teachers to communicate with one another about best practices, problems, solutions, and questions surrounding the topic of financial literacy education for children.
